[Effects of acute starvation on specific activity of carbohydrate, protein and lipid metabolism in the rat liver]. The investigations have been carried out with rats in the initial phase of starvation (6-8 days) on the activity of some energetic metabolites, i.e. glucose-6-phosphate dehydrogenase, citrate-synthetase, adenylate kinase, aspartate aminotransferase, alanine aminotransferase, malate dehydrogenase, lactate dehydrogenase, cholinesterase and 5'-nucleotidase. In contrast to the liver fatty acids, the decrease in the level of this group of metabolites was observed to various degree in different time of acute starvation. In rats subjected to 9-10 days of starvation the activity of the studied enzymes was decreased most markedly in the pyruvate dehydrogenase complex of the mitochondrial matrix.
